Summary

Massachusetts has made a lot of progress in recent years, as seen in its high ranking in 4 of its 5 categories. There is active legislation to address many of the issues that hold back the Legislation & Enforcement category, so Massachusetts remains a state to watch.

One statistic to watch will be the use of federal funds for biking and walking. While Massachusetts spends more than average as a percentage of its federal transportation funds, it spends less than average per capita. Resolving this relative vs. absolute discrepancy might show whether Massachusetts is content catching up or committed to being a leading state for bicycling.

Feedback Points

Continue the GreenDOT Implementation Plan which began in 2014 and incorporate current design guidance in MassDOT’s Project Development and Design Guide. Update Statewide Bicycle and Pedestrian Transportation Plans, in keeping with our current objectives and mandates, such as the GreenDOT plan. The last statewide bicycle plan was adopted in 2008.

Adopt a safe passing law with a minimum distance of 3 feet to address bicyclist safety.

Adopt a state law that requires the use of a hands-free device for cell phone use while driving to combat distracted driving and increase safety for everyone. Requiring the use of a hands-free device makes enforcement of texting laws easier by providing clearer evidence for enforcement.

Adopt a vulnerable road user law that increases penalties for a motorist that injures or kills a bicyclist or pedestrian. Model language is available here: http://bikeleague.org/content/model-legislation.

Establish a comprehensive bicycle and pedestrian count program that provides data on bicycle and pedestrian volumes on major commuter and recreational routes, including before/after counts that evaluate progress and provide insight on bicyclist safety and use.

The Massachusetts legislature enabled lower speed limits throughout Boston and other cities and towns by giving local authorities the ability to reduce default speed limits on roads owned by those local authorities. This is a great step to allow more local control over speed limits and projects that prioritize pedestrian and bicycle safety over motor vehicle mobility. The state legislature should continue to enable lower speed limits and street designs that enhance low speed limits.

1 This Figure is based upon the Census Bureau’s American Community Survey (ACS) 5-year estimate.
2 This Figure is based upon fatalities reported over a five-year period according to the National Highway Administration (NHTSA)’s Fatality Analysis Reporting System and the 2015 5-year ACS estimate of the number of bicycle commuters.
3 FHWA spending is based upon projects coded using any of three project types associated with bicycling and walking projects through the Federal Highway Administration (FHWA)’s Fiscal Management Information System. To calculate per capita spending we used a five-year average for fiscal years 2011-2016 and the 2015 5-year ACS state population estimate.
